Writing to Learn is a four-level series that focuses on writing as both a process and a product. The four books in the Writing to Learn series move students through writing good sentences to paragraphs and ultimately to writing good essays. Each book in the series emphasizes the writing-editing-rewriting process and prepares students to write through vocabulary acquisition activities and grammar practice.

Features of Writing to Learn:

- Each chapter is divided into four sections: Prewriting, Structure, Writing and Editing, and Journal Assignment.
- Editing is a regular, integrated step in the writing process.
- Prewriting and Structure activities build toward a specific writing task.
- Grammar structures are chosen based on their relevance to the specific writing task.
- A combination of oral and written practice and individual and group tasks enhance the learning process.
- A variety of writing samples is embedded in the activities where students are encouraged to work with them and manipulate them. This approach encourages students to use the samples as real springboards for their own writing.
- Chapter-end journal assignments allow students to synthesize what they have studied and practiced in the chapter.
